Low Fidelity Prototype/Sketch of The Cart Page

My changes included the removal of the Coupon section in my HTML rendition because it did not feel necessary as a feature. I removed the options for deliver and pick-up orders since both options are not needed in order for the customer to complete the check-out process. For example, completing the Checkout process and entering in residential information would not be relevant for someone ordering for pick-up.

High Fidelity Prototype of the Cart Page

A high-fidelity prototype of the 'Your Cart' page for 'Bun Bun Bake Shop'. The page features a header with the shop logo and name. Below the header is a navigation bar with four tabs: 'Your Cart', 'Shipping', 'Payment', and 'Confirmation'. The 'Your Cart' tab is active. The main content area is divided into two sections: 'Your Cart' on the left and 'Cart Summary' on the right. The 'Your Cart' section displays two items: 'The Original Glaze' (2 units, $2.46) and 'Pumpkin Spice Glaze' (1 unit, $3.19). Each item has a small image, a description, quantity input fields, and an 'Edit' button. The 'Cart Summary' section shows a total of '3 Items' and a list of the same two items with their descriptions and prices. At the bottom of the page are two large green buttons: 'Back to Shopping' and 'Proceed to Shipping'. The footer contains links for 'Our Story', 'Location', 'Ingredients', 'Products', 'Contact', and 'Help'. A 'Subtotal: $8.11' is displayed at the bottom right.
